THE CULTURAL SIGNIFICANCE OF MANGALSUTRA

Mangalsutra has significant importance in Hindu culture and traditions. It is an ornament (more specifically a necklace) worn by women to signify marital status. In India, Hindu married women wear it as an auspicious thread of goodwill and love. Therefore, the groom tying the Mangalsutra around the bride's neck during the wedding rituals is considered a sacred Hindu custom. What does it look like? Well, it is a golden and black beaded necklace with a diamond or gold pendant at the center. Read on to discover more. In Hindu traditions and culture, a woman has to wear five signs of marital status – the Mangalsutra, toe rings, Kumkum, bangles and a nose ring. Of these five, Mangalsutra is the most important. The word 'mangal' means sacred and 'sutra' means thread – therefore, Mangalsutra implies 'a sacred thread'. This concept of wearing Mangalsutra is believed to have started in South India, where it is called thaalee or thali or mangalyam. Traditionally it was a yellow thread smeared with turmeric paste, which was tied in three knots around the bride's neck. However, with changing times, it evolved with black and golden beads on the thread, and is now worn as a necklace. The Hindu culture also believes that a woman wearing a Mangalsutra, should never part with it as it's a very sacred thread. It also symbolizes the union of two souls (husband and wife), and protects them from all the evil in the world. Hence, to safeguard her married life and also the life of her husband, a Hindu married woman has to wear Mangalsutra.
